

David Grauwiler bio

David Grauwiler is the Executive Director of the Canadian Mental Health Association (CMHA), Alberta Division.

David is a key leader in the promotion of mental health in Alberta and a catalyst for connection between the CMHA, the provincial government, non-government organizations and agencies. He and the Alberta Division Team align with, and support, the work of CMHA leadership, volunteers and staff across the province.

Numerous projects managed by the Alberta Division spotlights better mental health in rural and remote communities, post-secondary campuses, youth, sports, caregivers, workplaces, first responders and all Albertans who live with a mental health challenge or support someone with a mental illness. Through these projects of provincial scope Albertans are gaining access and support in their own communities, in their regions and online.

As a member of the CMHA national leadership team, David is part of a nationwide federation of CMHA entities with one vision, “Mental Health for All”.

He has worked in the fields of family and relationship violence, poverty cessation, affordable housing, sexual exploitation and mental health and community development. David lives in Edmonton and enjoys a rich and supportive community of family, colleagues and friends. Building authentic relationships is at the centre of David’s work.
